Tennyson's Latest Poem

Two sums of love make day of human life." Which else, with all its pains and griefs and deaths, Were utter darkness; one the sun of dawn That brightens through the mother's tender eyes, And warms the child's awakening world; and one The latter rising sun of spousal love, Which from her household orbit draws the child To move in other spheres. The mother weeps At that white funeral of the single life? Her maiden daughter's marriage; and her tears Are half of pleasure, half of pain. The child Is happy ever in leaving her. But thou, True daughter, whose all faithful filial cyes Have seen the louliness of earthly thrones, Wilt wither quit the w'dowed crown, nor let This latter light of love have risen in vain. But, moving through the mother's home, between The two that love thee, lend a summer life. Swayed by each love, and swaying to each love Like some conjectured planet in mid heaven, Between two suns, and drawing down from both The light and genial warmth of couble day,

Review.

Dr. Newman then delivered the sermon, the family sittign, in the meantime, about the remains in the parlor. He spoke very feelingly in his address, which consumed one hour and a half in its delivery. He took as his text the twenty-first verse of the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

"Such, my brethren," said the speaker, "is the eulogy that God shall pronounce upon human goodness and fidelity wherever found among the sons of

The minister then dwelt upon the honors which were bestowed upon him, and the homage which was done his memory, and declared that "the secret of his power over the thoughts of the world and the love of mankind was his loftiness of character and grandeur of intellect, and the fact that he was none other than himself. He was one of the few men in history who exceeded expectation, by doing what all others had failed to do. He had no hatred in his heart. His holy evangel to the nation was 'Let us have peace,' and in his dying chamber he had grasped the hand of him whose sword was the first he had won. As illustrative of this broad spirit, the sorrow at his death is national to-day in its broadest sense. Duty to his conscience, his country and his God, was his standard of successful manhood. He was the humblest of men and a lover of the most lowly. His love of wife, children and home was supreme."

Speaking of the deep and tender affection he bore his wife, the speaker said: "And that such was the tender ness of his love and solicitude for her and hers appears by a letter found after his death. He had written it secretly and carried the sacred missive day after day during fourteen days, knowing she would find it at last.

He quoted from the letter as fo.lows: Look after our dear shildren and direct them in paths of rectitude. It would distress me far more to think that one of them would depart from an honorable, upright and virtuous life than it would to know they were prostrated on a bed of sickness from which they were never to arise alive. They have never given us any cause for alarm junctions and the knowledge I have of your love and affection and of the dutiful affection of our children, I bid you a final farewell until we meet in another and I trust a better world. Dr. Newman continuing said: "The principles of Christianity were deeply engrafted upon the spirit of General Grant. On the 18th of April last he said: 'I believe in the holy scriptures, and who so lives by them will be benifited. Men may differ as to interpretation, but the scriptures are man's best guide.' He held broad religious views,

The closing portion of the address & Son, and are catalogued was devoted to a discription of the last hours of the General's life, his calm fortitude, unwavering patience and clear brain; knowing that death was near and praying for its coming.

At the conclusion of the discourse the hymn, "Nearer my God to Thee," was rendered impressively by the congregation. The services ended with the benediction.
